ROYAL TYRRELL MUSEUM

Did You Know? Albertosaurus

- Joseph Burr Tyrrell discovered Albertosaurus on August 12, 1884 while mapping coal deposits in the Drumheller area.
- Albertosaurus sarcophagus was the apex predator in Alberta 72.5 – 68 million years ago.
- Albertosaurus was a theropod, a name that means “beast foot.” Theropods had hollow bones, three toes touching the ground, and small arms. They were bipedal, and generally carnivorous.
- Although it lived earlier in time, Albertosaurus is closely related to T. rex.
- Albertosaurus reached adulthood at about 18 years old, but continued to grow slowly for the remainder of its life.
- Albertosaurus—like most reptiles, amphibians, and fishes—had a very small brain relative to its body mass.
- Albertosaurus teeth were serrated, like a steak knife, and were used only to eat meat.

Museum Expansion

- This 1,300 m<sup>2</sup> expansion allows the Museum to better accommodate over 430,000 annual visitors with enhanced gallery and educational spaces and services.
- The $9.3 million expansion was co-funded by the Government of Alberta ($5.7 million) and the Government of Canada ($3.595 million from the Department of Canadian Heritage).
